GREEN TEAM SUMMIT PROVEN TO ENHANCE SUSTAINABILITY PERFORMANCE AND ENGAGEMENT

Michigan organizations are invited to send employee teams and team leaders to a half-day summit on Wednesday, March 25 at the Breslin Center at Michigan State University to learn from their peers, access training from leading sustainability experts, and celebrate their work.

The Green Team Summit will feature teams and representatives from 25 organizations that will share best practices, key initiatives, and green team projects. Last year’s event brought together 165 representatives from interdisciplinary teams tasked with moving forward sustainability initiatives within their organizations for a day of peer-to-peer learning and networking.

The program will feature a series of presentations from sustainability experts, interactive table exercises and break-out sessions. The summit is $30 per person, which includes lunch and refreshments. Organizations are encouraged to sign up as teams.
“I appreciated that it was completely approachable. It was inspiring and left me with many ideas of things that I could implement immediately or at least have meaningful conversations. The event was well structured and the beautiful setting gave the meeting the atmosphere that we were involved in something important.”

“As far as ROI for my company to spend the time/money to send me, I think that it was worth it as it immediately gave us an excuse to get together and debrief afterwards which has given us some ideas on how to gain momentum and fluidity across departments.”

“A better understanding that our common struggles are not just our own.”

“So many areas – logistical opportunities, ways to impact culture, problem solving and initiatives that we can implement.”

“All of it was useful, actually! The presentations were all very informative and helpful, and being able to ask questions.”

“Best practices as well as bouncing ideas off of each other in the roundtable discussions.”
